Dear School of Medicine colleague,

The July 20 deadline to connect your devices to Intune is approaching.

What you still need to do

You're halfway there — our records indicate you've successfully set up your new Microsoft login. As a final step, you'll need to connect every device you use for email and other university Microsoft services to Intune, including your phone if you check email on it.

Connect your device(s) to Intune

(If you've set up your login recently, you may need to wait 24 hours. The instructions to connect your devices can also be found by visiting som-login-guide.stanford.edu.)

- Windows: Most Windows devices will automatically enroll in Intune after you complete your login. If yours isn't eligible, you'll get a prompt to run a guided enrollment app.

 - What to expect with app-guided enrollment
- macOS: Look for a “Registration Required” pop-up on your Mac and follow the prompts. If you accidentally dismiss it, restart your device and it will come back.

- iOS/iPadOS: About 24 hours after setting up your login, open the Self Service app to complete registration.

- Linux: Install Microsoft Edge and enroll your device in Intune. (Tested on Ubuntu 24.04.3 LTS and Red Hat Enterprise Linux (RHEL) 9.6.)

- Android: If you are currently using an Android device for Stanford work, it should already be enrolled in Intune. If not, follow the instructions below.

Verify devices are connected

Visit Microsoft's Company Portal website to confirm your devices are connected to Intune. If all the devices you use to access university email and other Microsoft services appear in the portal, you have successfully completed your setup.

- Newly connected devices can take up to one hour to appear in the Company Portal, so don't worry if you don't see it right away.
- Learn more about how to check device compliance on the Company Portal site.
